Dear Dr. Green:

I hope you'll take a moment from your schedule to read the enclosures to this letter because they describe a venture I think you'll appreciate knowing about.

It's called The Classics of Medicine Library, and I think it is something you should at least be aware of. The idea is really quite simple: the creation of a privately-printed, numbered and registered set of the landmark books in medicine, bound in genuine leather, and made available to a small group of physicians under a year-long repurchase agreement.

As much as I believe these heirloom books will be highly valued for their intrinsic importance and beauty, I think you'll be even more proud of them for being continuous reminders of the glorious heritage we are privileged to share in our calling.

I would think that you might consider examining the first volume of this truly remarkable library. Returning the enrollment form will assure that your first volume will be registered with the lowest possible number. The same number that will be assigned to successive volumes, should you care to continue.

Do give the enclosures a moment, please. They describe a fleeting opportunity to make an investment that I have no doubt will bring you great rewards in more ways than one. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Sherwin B. Nuland, M.D.

P.S. I have just talked with Leslie Adams, Publisher of the Library, and he tells me he wants to make Charter Membership so irresistible that if he hears from you in time, he promises to send you the first volume in the Library, Sir William Osler's THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF MEDICINE, absolutely free. See the enclosed enrollment form for details of this extraordinary offer, but I do suggest you hurry!
